

Think–Pair–Share Activity: "Share Findings"

Audience members find participant quote strips around the room, guess the dimension, form groups, connect the data to practice, and share questions in plenary.

Room setup

Participant quotes are planted around the room as strips of paper. Each strip belongs mainly to one dimension of discipline: obedience, internalisation, or performativity.

"ah jus' so di Army ting set"

"ingrained in you"

"eye-service"

"doing the right thing..."

1

Think: find and read

Participants walk the room, choose a quote strip, read it aloud, and make a first guess: obedience, internalisation, or performativity.

2

Pair: form the first leaders

The first three different readings become group leaders. Each leader stands for one dimension and gathers people whose strips appear to fit that theme.

3

Share: build the group reading

Groups compare all strips, discuss where each quote fits, and connect the evidence to their own practice or experience of discipline.

Three dimension groups

OBEDIENCE

Does the quote frame discipline as authority, rules, enforcement, compliance, hierarchy, trust, or military requirement?

Prompt: Where does obedience help practice, and where might it close discussion?

INTERNALISATION

Does the quote frame discipline as self-control, habit, repetition, consistency, inner quality, durability, or self-regulation?

Prompt: What makes discipline last when no one is forcing it?

PERFORMATIVITY

Does the quote frame discipline as visible display, appearance, standard, eye-service, Hummingbird, Jankro, or conduct under watch?

Prompt: How do we tell display from real formation?

Group task

Relate every strip of paper to practice or lived experience. Decide which quotes are clear, which are ambiguous, and which raise the strongest question about discipline.

Each group chooses one point to share, one question to ask, or one tension to bring to the plenary.

Plenary: the group leaders join the researcher at the front

The researcher is seated. Each group leader shares the group's chosen point or question. The plenary then tests where obedience, internalisation, and performativity overlap.
